Navy Reserve

Ready Now. Anytime, Anywhere.

Submarine Force Reserve Component (SFRC)

SFRC efficiently provides capable Sailors who seamlessly integrate into active commands worldwide to enhance effectiveness and accomplish Submarine Force missions. Our major lines of effort are undersea warfare operations, maintenance, force protection, and submarine rescue.

Expeditionary Maintenance (EM) Sailors conduct repair and maintenance in tender repair shops and on submarines to ensure the force is at the highest state of readiness. At Reserve Intermediate Maintenance Activities (RIMA), as shown above, EM Sailors fabricate parts for submarines from raw materials.

SFRC Sailors make up half the manning for the only permanent U.S. Navy submarine rescue command. Sailors in Submarine Rescue (SUBR) units are on standby 24/7 and are an essential part of an AC/RC team. An SFRC SUBR Sailor is shown above exercising the Atmospheric Diving System. If you're a diver, please join our team.

SFRC Sailors in Undersea Warfare Operations (UWO) provide anti-submarine warfare (ASW) expertise to theaters and strike groups. UWO Sailors man watch floors at four CTFs (as shown above). They also go to sea with Carrier Strike Groups to augment Destroyer Squadron Staffs and serve aboard the diesel submarines of partner navies as liaison officers. Aviation and surface designated officers are an essential part of this capability.

SFRC Sailors in Force Protection (FP) units provide security for submarines in port. Weapons qualified FP Sailors stand perimeter watches and control access to ballistic missile submarines (SSBN) when away from home port. As shown above, FP Sailors are constantly honing their skills in weapons and tactics. Most FP Sailors come from security related rates.
